Brought before the Bew-street magistrate the circumstances of his arrest were detailed and a remand granted, bail being fixed at 46,000. Mr. Sievier says he has a perfect answer to the charge.—(Page 4)

At the resumed inquest on the body of the young girl Rickard, discovered shot at the ruins of Castle-an-Dinas, Cornwall, the jury found she was murdered by Charles Berryman, who, it was shown, afterwards committed suicide. In the case of the latter they found a verdict of Felo-de-se.—(P. 5.)

STUPENDOUS LOSSES.

10,000 Russian Casualties in Two Days' Fighting.

TWO BATTLES RAGING.

Opposing Armies and Squadrons in Action.

The most sensational news of yesterday is a report by General Oku, stating that the Russian sualties in the Wa-fang-kau fighting number

Regarding the general position, three Russian Generals, with a combined force of about 100,000 men, are concentrating near Haicheng, on the railway north of Newchwang. Part of this force is General Stackelberg's beaten army, retreating north from Wa-fang-kau, being covered by General Krondratenko, and, to meet these two armies, General Kuropatkin is travelling south from Laioyang. Meanwhile, General Stackelberg is being pursued from the south by General Oku's victorious army from Sui-yen; General Nodzu is operating in the direction of the railway, as is also a large body of General Kuroki's troops from Feng-huang-cheng. The three Japanese armies, numbering also about 109,000, are trying to cut off General Stackelberg's retreat before General Kuropatkin can reach him.

From a message to hand yesterday fighting has commenced, trainloads of wounded Russians having been sent to the north.

It is still possible that the Russian Vladivostok squadron has not yet reached the security of that harbour, and it is not probable that Admiral Kamimura has given up his search for them, despite a telegram from Tokio stating that he had returned to his base. Two messages received yesterday indicate that the two squadrons have been engaged. It is not easy to identify Oshima, one of the places named, as the well-known Oshima is 55 to 60 miles south of Yokohama, and can hardly be the place indicated.

The place where the squadrons are engaged is probably the island of Ikishima, near Shimonoseki, in the Korean Straits.

APPALLING LOSSES.

General Oku Fixes the Russian Casualties at 10,000 Men.

Tokio, Monday.

A report received from General Oku says:—
"The total Russian losses, including prisoners, are now estimated at 10,000."—Reuter.

RUSSIA'S SEVERE LOSSES.

At the Japanese Legation in London the following has been received:—
General Oku reports: Russian corpses buried by us near Telissa up to evening of June 12 amounted to 1,516.
Russian corpses still forthcoming, and believed by its hear remise up amounted to 1,516.

"Russian corpses still forthcoming, and believed to increase considerably.

"Natives say Russians during engagement carried back their killed and wounded by railway, while later, when about taking flight, they buried or cremated corpses near Huasungkou.

"List of captured rifles, guns, and prisoners increasing, but exact number yet unknown."

FIGHTING WITH STONES.

ST. PETERSBURG, Monday.

Sr. Peterssured, Monday.

In the Telissa fight on the 15th inst. the survivors of the 6th Company of the 3rd Regiment—about half the strength at which the company statted—actually got within twenty paces of the Japanese entrenchments; and the men lay panting under the Japanese trenches, whose occupants, owing to the convexity of the hills, were unable to fire on them without raising themselves well over the edge of their trenches, and every time they did this they were greeted with a hall of bullets and scoffing chaff.

Here and there the assailants and defenders actually came hand to hand, and at this point the battle was carried on for some time with the butt end of rifles and stones.—Reuter.

RUSSIAN OFFICER'S PRAISE.

NEWCHWANG, Monday,

NEWCHWANG, Monday.

A Russian officer, who was wounded in the fighting at Wa-fang-tien, estimates the Russian casualties to have been at least 7,000.

He says that no soldiers in the world could withstand the Japanese as they have been fighting lately. Their artillery fire was marvellously accurate and effective.

The Russians fought stubbornly and desperately, but they were unable to withstand the enemy's dashing persistency.—Reuter's Special Service.

RUSSIAN RAIDERS.

Has the Vladivostok Squadron Opens Her London Season with Been Caught?

The following telegrams suggest an engageme between the Vladivostok squadron and Admiral Kamimura's fleet :-

TOKIO, Monday

Reports from Shimonoseki state that cannonad ing has been heard there, and it is surmised that this may indicate that the Vladivostok squadron is again in the Korea Straits.

It is reported that Admiral Kamimura is engaging the Russian cruisers off Oshima.

The Navy Department cannot confirm this re port, though the officials there are honeful that the Russian retreat will be cut off.—Reuter.

BATTLE IN PROGRESS.

Train Loads of Russian Wounded Going North.

LIAO-YANG, Monday

Reports have reached here of further fighting to the south on a considerable scale, and a battle is stated to be in progress near Kaichau. A train load of wounded has passed north, and others are following.-Reuter

FORCES CONVERGING.

ROME, Sunday. A telegram from Chifu says that the Japanese are continuing their advance towards Kaiping, while General Stackelberg is still withdrawing northwards.—Exchange Telegraph Company.

PARIS, Monday

A St. Petersburg message states that the Third Division, under General Krondratenko, is now covering the retreat of General Stackelberg on Liao-yang.

The situation of General Stackelberg's army is precarious, and General Kuropatkin has left Liao-yang with a considerable force to attempt to reach General Stackelberg before the latter is attacked by Japanese from Siu-yen.—Exchange Telegraph Company.

KUROPATKIN IN COMMAND.

For the first time since his appointment General Kuropatkin is personally directing the operations.

RUSSIANS MOVING SOUTH

GEN. KUROKI'S HEADQUARTERS (undated), Via Fusan, Sunday

From 5,000 to 6,000 Russians occupied Tsaimaki on the 17th. A considerable force is at Hiaihota, near Tachichao.

Note.—Tsaimaki is almost due north of Sui-yen on the direct Feng-huang-cheng-Haicheng road.— Reuter's Special Service.

TRYING TO BREAK OUT.

General Stoessel is said to have made sorties from Port Arthur on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday last, but was driven back.

TROOPS ALMOST IN RAGS.

A wealthy Chinese refugee from Port Arthur states that not only are the Russians in Port Arthur short of food and forage, but the troops are almost in rags, and the men are wearing Chinese shoes.

He adds that there are 3,000 or 4,000 wretched Chinese in Port Arthur, and that executions are

MOVING ON LHASSA.

British Expedition To Start in Four Davs.

Several questions were addressed to Mr. Brodrick in the House of Commons yesterday as to developments in connection with the Tibet expedition Steps are being taken by the Indian Government to send such reinforcements and transports as they consider necessary for the security of the Mission but Mr. Brodrick was unwilling to give details.

but Mr. Brodrick was unwilling to give details.

June 25 has, he continued, been approved as the date on which the expedition is to be authorised to proceed to Lhassa.

If by then the Tibetan Government has not sent a competent negotiator, accompanied by the Chinese Amban, to Gyangtse, the Mission will act on these instructions. The Russian Government has been informed of the general intentions and policy of his Majesty's Government. Throughout the Russian Ambassador has been kept fully informed of what the Government were doing.

Captain Kutaisoff, writing from Port Arthur, says that a pigeon was picked up in the town early in May with a quill, containing a message, attached to its leg. The message, which was in bad Russian and signed "K. Takahashi, battleship Assawi," read thus:—"To his Excellency General Stossel.—You are invited to dine with me on June 21 as a prisoner.—R.S.V.L."

"LA DIVINE SARAH."

"La Sorciere."

Unlike her compatriot Réjane, Madame Sarah Bernhardt has started her season at His Majesty's straight away with her greatest and most famous and most recent production, Sardou's "La Sor-With it she certainly bids fair to take London by storm, as she did Paris.

Like everything that Sardou has done lately,

Like everything that Surdou has done lately, "La Sorcière" is, first and foremost, a triumph in the adaptation of means to ends—that is to say, of Sardou's own infinite dexterity as a dramatist to the needs of a passionate part and magnificent surroundings for the "divine Sarah."

To be brief, the "sorciere" of the title is a Moorish sorceress, who appears before the Spanish Inquisition in the fearful days of the early sixteenth century on a charge of weaving spells over her lover, Enruque, a Catholie. Scenes of almost unexampled splendour—not to speak of the fuscination of Bernhardt herself in a part that brings out all her wonderful faculty for the glamour of mystery—interest the andience for two acts.

Then, in the third, arrives the moment when she is called upon, by the tribunal of the Inquisition, either to save her lover's life by confessing herself a sorcress, or to make his death certain by denying that his love was the result of her own witcherst.

Bernhardt's Famous Cry.

Bernhardt's Famous Cry.

Suddenly, with a wild cry of passion that electrifies the house, Bernhardt determines to save him at all cost. She confesses, even in defiance of his own protests, that she has bewitched him, and braves even the terrors of the stake, which we see in actual preparation in the last act.

There, too, is a passionate and altogether typical Bernhardtesque death-scene; for the sorceress, though granted a free pardon, has to be rescued from the mob by her lover. He is killed in the riot that follows, and she falls dead over his body, on the steps of the Cathedral at Toledo.

The play is a marvellous spectacle. It is also an ideal succession of opportunities for Bernhardt, whose "golden voice" is just as musical as ever, and her amazing energy of passion not one whit abated.

Happily one may add the reconciliation of Madame Bernhardt and B. de Max resulted in the cardinal who examines and sentences the sorcerss being played by an artist whose magnetism and grip of the audience were no less astonishing than his wonderful make-up.

The King and Queen were both present, and the house was crowded by a fashionable audience.

BRILLIANT NEW OPERA

Society Gathers at Covent Garden to Hear M. Saint-Saens's "Helene."

The interest manifested in the production of Saint-Saëns's new opera has been very great, and last night, when "Hélène" was at length produced, Covent Garden was crammed with people famous in society and the world of music

The "star" cast doubtless helped to bring this about, for Melba appeared in the title rôle, Miss Parkina as Venus, Madame Kirkby Lunn as Pallas, and M. Dalimores as Paris, while M. Messager nd M. Dalmores as Faris, while are onducted.

The opera, which is not a long one, is called by he composer a "poème lyrique." It is cast in n unusual form, there being only one act, divided.

an unusual form, there being only one act, divided into six "scenes."

The plot deals with the familiar Homeric story of the events subsequent to the famous judgment of Paris. The opera opens with a scene outside the palace of Menelaus, where Helen and Paris meet, and closes with their flight, the last scene showing them sailing away together.

The music is not of an epoch-making character, but (as usual with Saint-Saëns) is very brilliant, especially in the vocal parts. M. Saint-Saëns was present, and the audience proved very enthusiastic.

"NO DATE" FOR ARMY REFORM.

Mr. Balfour, replying to Mr. Bryce, said in the House yesterday that he could not give the date on which the Secretary for War would make his promisted announcement to the House on Army

TO MAKE TOMMY ATKINS THRIFTY.

Lord Stanley, in the House yesterday, said that, with a view to encouraging soldiers to use the Post Office Savings Bank, he was prepared to make arrangements for the periodical attendance of a postal official at regimental depots to receive deposits collected by regimental officers from the men.

MUSICAL TWINS.

Jan Kubelik Becomes Proud Father.

HAPPY BUT ANXIOUS.

Jan Kubelik, tied to his engagements in London, has become a father. His wife, far away at their home in Bohemia, presented him with twins at eleven o'clock on Sunday night.

He was writing a long letter to her when the Mirror representative entered his room at his hotel, but he sprang up at once with a smile of greeting.

"May I offer you congratulations, Herr Kubelik?"

"Yes, it is true," said the young virtuoso. He looked so young, one could hardly imagine him as a father. "But really I hardly know myself," he added.

THE NERVOUS FATHER.

He was nervous and agitated, as well he might be. He had been away for the week-end, and on his return early yesterday morning the telegram amouncing the event was handed to him.

He had left his wife, whom he married only a year ago, at their home, Kolin Castle, in Bohemia, in order that he might fulfil his engagements, and do his duly to the music-leoving public, He was away on private pleasure when the event ments, and do his duty to the music-loving public. He was away on private pleasure when the event happened.

"You see," he said in his quiet, broken English, anxiously pressing his handkerchief between his moist palms, and again running his hand through his long, black hair, "it is the first time I have been a father. She there and I here. Ah! But I could not break my engagements."

"Ah, yes," he added, "my wife is quite well, but I am anxious."

"Herr Kubellk," said the Mirror representative, "may I ask whether you would accept from the Daily Mirror some small christening present for your firstborn to mark what is no doubt, after your marriage, the greatest occasion in your life?"

The young virtuoso's face brightened. He made a deprecating gesture.

"Oh, yes," he said, "I should accept with much pleasure.

"No, indeed," he went on, "I do not think it hard that there were two; it is a joy to me—a joy."
And his b'g brown eyes, so wide apart and steady, glowed with pleasure.

VICTIM OF "ENGAGEMENTS."

Jan Kubelik, who has been loved by hundreds of women for his good looks and his rare genius, married the woman he loved. Yet, as the slave of the public, he is forced to be far away from her and from his firstborn. She in Bohemia, and he cooped up in a London hotel.

It is a pathetic page from the life of a public man, and shows clearly what are the limitations and sacrifices the famous pay for their fame.

In a few days the Daily Mirror christening present will be handed to Herr Kubelik.

A pottrait of Herr Kubelik appears on page 9.

P. AND O. DISASTER.

Loss of Steamer Worth a Quarter of a Million Sterling.

For the first time in fifty years the P. and O. Company have lost a vessel on the Australian

The name of the lost steamer is the Australia, vhich was wrecked at the entrance to Melbourn Harbour. Perfect discipline was maintained, and both passengers and crew were landed in safety. No hopes are entertained of saving the vessel, as there are fifteen feet of water in the engine-room. The P. and O. Company do not insure their ships, but maintain a big insurance fund of their own, as the more economical method. The loss to be borne by this reserve fund is about a quarter of a million sterling. of a million sterling.

UNSKILFUL OARSMEN DROWNED.

Bad oarsmanship has led to the loss of two lives on the Basingstoke Canal. Four youths were rowing in a light half-outriger when they got in the way of an approaching craft, and the collision caused their boat to ship a little water. The boat did not sink, but the lads were panic-stricken, and all four jumped overboard into deep water.

Two, named Halfaire and Street, who clung to each other, sank at once, and were not seen again until their bodies were recovered with drags.

FIRE ON BLACKFRIARS RAILWAY BRIDGE.

For the second time within three months five broke out last night on Blackfriars Railway Bridge. The Alpha float and several engines quickly got to work, and succeeded in preventing any serious

MR. SIEVIER ARRESTED.

Sensational Charge Against Sceptre's Former Owner.

A COOL PRISONER.

"Thank you, I am quite cheerful," said Mr Robert Standish Sievier, familiarly known in the racing world as "Bob" Sievier, to a representative of the Mirror, who exchanged a few words at Bow-street Police Court yesterday with the man whom Sceptre made famous.

Mr. Sievier had just been remanded on £6,000 bail, which was found for him by two sureties, Mr. Robert Topping and Mr. Clark Frost, in two moieties of £3,000 each. The charge against him is perjury in a private examination in bankrupte or December 8, 1898.

"I have a perfect answer to the charge," said Mr. Sievier, betraying no trace of nervousness as to the fate in front of him. It would have been churlish to have withheld some admiration for the pluck he displayed. There were no quaver ing tones in his deep voice, nor any of the ordinary indications of fear in his looks or manner. His sporting friends, unmistakable from their style and open-air complexions, who stood about the corridors of the court, seemed much more agitated than the "pal" whom they had not forsaken.

Give Me a Fair Field.

"All I ask for," continued Mr. Sievier, letting his friends walk on, "is a little bit fairer trial than I had some time ago from Mr. Justice Grantham Given this, I shall come through the perjury charge all right. It is for this reason that I appear to you to be so composed.

"There is plenty of fair play in England, and especially in English courts of justice, and I am confident as to the result of this case."

Mr. Sievier explained the circumstances of bir

"What is it all about?" I asked Chief-Inspector Arrow. He told me he had a warrant against me for perjury. And here I am leaving Bow-street on £0,000 bail." It had been an eventful morning. "They didn't want much," remarked one of Mr. Sieyier's friends, as he joined them. "And from a man who was only lately made bankrupt."

As Mr. Sievier—a thick-set, rather short man, wearing a blue suit and a bowler-walked away with two tall, athletic friends, taking a short cut through Covent Garden, it did not appear that anyone recognised him.

The Politest of Prisoners.

The Polities of Prisoners.

The proceedings before the magistrate had not taken as much time as the interval spent in finding the necessary bail, though that did not take more than half an hour. If any stranger had stepped into Bow-street during that period of suspense, he must have, gathered that something unusual was adoot, judging from the numbers of well-dressed men eagerly conferring in whispers. They were contriving, as one of them observed, to "raise the wind for Bob."

Mr. Bogkin prosecuted on behalf of the Director of Public Prosecutions, and Mr. Wontner attended to the interests of the accused.

Detective-Inspector, Arrow, wasting no words, told the story of the arrest, and in doing so went out of the beaten track of rigmatole to describe Mr. Sievier as the politest of prisoners. He told how the accused said at Scotland Yard: "I am sorry that I gave you so much trouble at Shruton last night, but I surrender myself now to answer any charge you make against me."

Mr. Sievier added: "I have a perfect answer to this charge. I have courted this investigation."

Mr. Marsham, the stipendiary, then fixed the bail at 46,000, whereat there was surprise among the friends of the accused. A consultation followed, and Mr. Sievier's counsel made an ofter of two sureties in £1,000 each, which, of course, fell content of the country of the course, and the standard of the country of the Ultimately the £6,000 was guaranteed, and the magistrate had his joke with counsel: "Mr. Wontner, your bail has tuned round on you."

WOMEN "CLUBMEN."

Female Workers Installed in a £6,000 a Year Mansion.

The Lyceum Club for working women-and the wives of distinguished working men-was opened yesterday at 128, Piccadilly. A respectful crowd watched the arrival of an endless stream of car-riages, and noticed the accustomed grace with which the working women swept up the wide stairway into their £6,000 a year mansion.

Being situated—ideally some people say—be-tween the "Bachelors" and the "Cavalry," the latest women's club can give points to either in the spaciousness of its suites of apartments and its view up and down Piccadilly and over the Green Pork

When ladies take possession of a man's club with all its belongings there are bound to be odd signs of its famous owners. Of such is a mammoth tarpon hanging on the staircase, and the little hole in the billiard-room door with "Watch the stroke" over it. This caused quite an undue amount of crushing pretty dresses and much feminine curiosity as to what it could possibly mean.

No one ventured to test the smoking-room, and the card-room was vacant, perhaps because money stakes are prohibited.

Functually to-morrow afterneon at 3 p.m., as Big Ben atrikes the hour, the Mirror car will leave the Embankment, at the foot of Carmelite-street, for its long northern journey to Perth.

The Talbot car, in which the trip will be made, is an ordinary 20-h.p. four-cylinder, four-seated touring car, with tonneau body, and was taken haphazard from the showrooms of the Clement-Talbot Company in Long-acre.

The Clincher tyres are of the usual type, made by the North British Rubber Company, and it is hoped that this run will establish the equality of British tyres with the Continental articles.

Mr. Weigel, the driver, has piloted cars in the Paris-Vienna and Paris-Madrid races, and is considered one of the foremost experts in the automobile industry.

The Talbot car will run 160 miles on one charge of petrol, but in case of emergencies en route the agents have arranged to supply the spirit every 100 miles.

Food will be handed to the occupants of the car by the agents who bring the petrol.

In an interview with a Mirror representative yesterday Mr. Weigel said, "I am very confident that we shall succeed in oursattempt unless some unforescent disaster intervenes.

After completing the trip Mr. Weigel is to be married early next week, and has already received numerous congratulations on both events.

Reference was again made to Mr. A. J. Paine's Friday visits to Mr. Ernest Terah Hooley at Walsingham House when the charge of conspiring to defraud Mr. Paine was further investigated at Bow-street yesterday.

For a brief minute during the case Mr. Hooley and Mr. H. J. Lawson had a companion in the dock. A lady who found her way into the crowded court, at a loss for a seat, saw that there was room at the entrance to the dock beside Mr. Lawson and promptly sat down. But the gaoler at once stepped forward and whispered the word "Dock' in her ear. With a blush the lady started from the seat which she had so innocently taken and sought refuge in a chair which the gaoler had procured for

Mr. Paine, in the course of his cross-examination by Mr. Avory, who is defending Hooley, gave details of certain share transactions in connection with a Blackpool company.

"Are the Blackpool shares to-day at par?" he was asked

"I should be very doubtful, because nothing that Mr. Hooley has had to deal with since his bankruptcy has ever attained the dignity of being up to par," Mr. Paine replied.

Encouraging Mr. Avory.

There was some repetition of the heated passages between counsel and witness which had marked the previous hearing.

"You needn't be afraid, Mr. Avory, I sha'n't make any misstatements," Mr. Paine was saying, when Mr. Hooley's counsel cut him short with "Don't talk to me, sir. Just answer the question."

The subject of the Walsingham House Fridays was brought up by Mr. Avory asking whether a certain visit was paid on Wednesday, April 3, 1901.

Mr. Paine replied that it was quite possible. His days for visiting Walsingham House were Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays. "Fridays were the days when they caught me," he added. Mr. Avory: Or the days when you tried to catch them?

Mr. Paine: Ah! I had very bad luck. A desire was shown by Mr. Paine to go more fully into certain matters, but Mr. Avory stopped him. "We don't want to get more into the mire," he said.

"I don't mind going into the mire to get this cleared up," shouted Mr. Paine, and drew down on himself a remonstrance from Mr. Fenwick, the

"But now I know," he continued. "I haven't got much to learn about mining shares."

Why, that's nothing for Mr. Hooley. He tried to burgle my house, the Windsor Castle, He entered into a conspiracy with another man to break in and steal my papers and documents."

"Did Mr. Hooley ever lend you money?" asked. Mr. Avory. Mr. Paine's reply resolved itself into a smothered ejaculation, apparently intended to express contempt.

DANGER TO THE RACE.

In charging the grand jury at the opening of the Old Bailey Sessions yesterday, the Recorder commented on the circumstances of the case against Dr. Frederick Hicks, a West End practitioner, who is accused of making an illegal use of surgical instruments.

"The case discloses," he said, "a condition of morality which, I trust, has not spread very far or wide. If it does, there must ensue a decadence of our race, which must have most serious consequences.

"Had the woman in this case died, the doctor would have been charged with murder. Of late, there has been a tendency in such an event to minimise this offence to manslaughter; but by what process of reasoning this course is arrived at I have not been able to understand."

SANDERSON V. SANDERSON.

Mr. George Frederick Theodore Sanderson was in July, 1909, living with his wife in Belfast. He had been married eight years, and had recently been appointed to the post of manager of a local music-hall. One morning he announced his intention of going for a bathe at the "Black Head Rock," near the town, and rode away from home on his bicycle.

He never came back to his home again. That very evening Mrs. Sanderson read in the Belfast evening papers that her husband's clothes, with his boots and towel, had been found near the rock.

But Mr. Sanderson had not been drowned, as his wife naturally believed, and as he had schemed she should believe. He had taken passage for Liverpool, and thence sailed away to Australia with another woman.

This she did not find out until long afterwards.
Then it came to her ears that her husband's father had received the following letter from his son:—

My Dear Father,—This is from your loving son George. I fell in love more like a madman than a same person, and gave up all for the girl loved. We arrived here (Sydney) September 13, 1900, and I have been out of employment ever since, and have been starving with the poor lass I brought with me. Ask God to forgive me. Some time after the wedding Ben Kay paid a visit to his former sweetheart. Counsel's description of this incident reminded admirers of Hood in Court of certain lines from "Nellie Gray," which, with the lady's name altered, applied exactly, to the scene being pictured. It is excusable to quote them—even in such a real-life, and connection—so close is the parallel:—

Mrs. Flight tried to get him back, and once, when she met him with the girl in Tottenham Court-road, there was a painful scene.

For many years she refrained from seeking a divorce, hoping against hope that her husband would get over his infatuation and return to her. Now at length she realised that this was impossible, and so asked for a divorce.

Mrs. Norris married Dr. Edwin Norris seventeen years ago. They lived together amicably until the wife conceived an attachment for her own nephew, a young man only eighten years old.

There were confessions, and Mrs. Norris then wrote a letter begging for forgiveness.

"My dear Edwin," she said, "can't you find it in your heart to forgive me? I am not so young as I was seventeen years ago. If I do not hear from you I shall have nothing in front of me but the river. Has all your love turned to hate?"

But her husband felt obliged to ask for a divorce, which yesterday was granted to him.

The jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against Berryman. The finding of Berryman's body in a pool near Castle-an-Dinas was described by Simon Chapman, a farmer. Berryman must have been well acquainted with the spot, as he had often gone there nutting as a schoolboy.

Chapman also discovered a revolver containing one spent cartridge and three cartridges, and a policeman took from Berryman's pocket a box containing thirty-six cartridges. #### Will Fry Score Four Thousand Runs This Season?

C. B. Fry has probably never been in better form than he is this year.

Although only one-third of the season has yet run its course, he has scored no fewer than 1,309 runs, and possesses an average of 87.37 for sixteen completed innings. When it is remembered tera completed minings. When it is remembered that Fry has scored a century once in every three times he has been at the wickets, it will be seen that he has only to keep up this average to break all records. In 1901 Fry scored thirteen centuries in forty-three innings, and if he plays no more innings than he did that year he should smother this record by compiling at least fourteen centuries.

Abel holds the appregate record. He made 3,309 in 1901, but Fry, on recent form, is almost certain to eclipse this, and even 4,000 runs, for the season is by no means impossible.

HUMILIATING AND ABSURD

Once more the Prime Minister had to tell the House of Commons yesterday that the Cabinet have not yet decided what kind of an Army this country requires. It sounds ridiculous, yet that is really the meaning of Mr. Balfour's refusal to say when the longpromised statement by Mr. Arnold-Forster will be made. Would it not be best to suspend the sittings of Parliament and let Ministers devote their time to this question of supreme importance day by day and all day until they come to some agreement about it

Compared with this, all other matters before the country are insignificant. - What is the good of excluding peaceful aliens in their thousands if we are in danger of not being able to exclude an invading army of them in tens of thousands all disciplined and armed? Why worry about compensating disturbed publicans when there is a chance of our having to think about compensating some hostile Power for its trouble in making a raid upon Liverpool or Hull?

Our own view of the matter is very simply explained. What Britain needs is a small professional Army, say, 120,000 men, thoroughly well trained and equipped, and prepared to go anywhere at a few hours' notice. Behind this force we ought to have hundreds of thousands of citizen-soldiers, familiar with weapons, amenable to discipline, knowing as much of the conditions of actual warfare as can be taught by camps of instruction and sensibly-planned manœuvres, and ready to take the field whenever it is ne-and ready to take the field whenever it is necessary for us to employ a large Army.

If possible, these hund.eds of thousands should be volunteers, paid for the time they devote to soldiering, and given certain special privileges as citizens. If we cannot get enough volunteers, then we ought to introduce some measure of conscription. This scheme is approved by many of the highest defence authorities, and it would have two very great advantages. It would give us an Army suited to our peculiar needs, and it would save many millions of money.

It would also put an end to the present absurd and humiliating state of things which obliges the Prime Minister to get up in his place in Parliament and say that he does not know what sort of an Army this great country requires.

Women's hands are growing larger. is the meaning of the statement made by a leading glove manufacturer that "sixes" are now a good deal larger than they used to be. now a good deal larger than they used to be. Grasping the handles of bicycles, holding golf-clubs and lawn tennis rackets, wielding heavy hockey-sticks—all these are responsible for the increase of size. As for the wish to have gloves called "sixes," even though they be "six and a quarter," that must be put down to the exaggerated self-respect which unkind seemls call transity. people call vanity.

MORNING'S GOSSIP. THIS

At last General Kuropatkin is on the move. A few days must bring us news of the success or failure of his first encounter with the Japanese. I near that he is still as sure as he was when he left St. Petersburg that he will never return to Russia alive. The stories about his taking a coffin with him are absard, of course. But something his old mother said when he went to bid her farewell struck him as a bad omen, and ever since then he has been persuaded that his career is near its end.

Everyone who knows Lord Dundonald is con-Everyone who knows Lord Dundonald is confident that he hasn't spoken about the dangerous state of Canada's defences either without reason or without long consideration of the matter. "One of the most silent men I have ever met," is what a war correspondent who knew Dundonald in South Africa calls him. This same correspondent, by the way, gives a vivid account of the arrival of the relieving force at Ladysmith.

"we were not expecting them," he says. "Only the day before our rations had been reduced to the lowest point on which a man can stave, and we were settling down to despair. But the news ran were settling down to despair. But the news ran swiftly up and down the streets, and we crawled out to meet them with cheers such as ghosts might give at the sight of the living. In front of them came Dundonald himself—a trim, spare, soldierly man, with short, waving grey hair, a big mous-tache, and keen brown eyes under the stroop brows. There was no excitement, no ecstatic emotion eithet in him or in anyone there. Nothing in the least like the imaginary pictures that sell.<sup>13</sup>

A good many of the "clubbable souls" who were at the Lyceum yesterday afternoon had to hurry off to dress for the Women Writers' dinner in hurry off to dress for the Women Writers' dinner in the evening. What a shy little chairwoman Miss Beatrice Hurraden made! Her tiny figure and delicate features, crowned with masses of loose hair, looked more fragile than ever. There was a time when Miss Harraden disliked publicity even more than "slating" reviews, of which she has had her share. But increased fame has brought with it increased courage and she did her duty at the Criterion like a man.

It was only an accident which made Miss Harra-den persevere with her writing. She had made up her mind very early in life that she would like to see her work in *Blackwood's Magazine." But see her work in "Blackwood's Magazine." But when she sent in her first story, the manuscript promptly came back. She tossed it into a drawer and felt that there yas no hing left for her but to bid the world farewelf. A fittle time afterwards she came across the rejected tale and out dropped a note from the editor advising her to try again. So she went ahead like steam and soon became famous.

"Jacky" Fisher will be warmly welcomed back at the Admiralty. He has the same passion for "putting things properly through," as Lord Kitchener, and a way of doing it that wins him popularity instead of dislike. He does not talk a great deal, but, when he does, he does not talk a great deal, but, when he does, he says things and means them. He once told the guests at a Royal Academy dinner that whenever he got up to make a speech he thought of the time he went on board his first ship, "and saw inscribed in great big gold letters, the one word, 'Silence.'"

If he woke up the Admiralty when he was Second Sea Lord, much more will he keep it on the run as Commander-in-Chief of the Navy. He will certainly be a great change after. Lord Walter Kerr, whom he succeeds. Lord Walter is a good sailor and a conscientious, but he has a gentle, almost diffident, manner, quite unlike Admiral Fisher's brezzy, humorous, strong man's way. The one man owed his position in large measure to his noble birth. The other has made his way solely by "grit" and cleverness.

mobe birth. The other has made his way solely by "grit" and cleverness.

The news that Lord Plunket was yesterday sworn in as Governor of New Zealand reminds me of an unkind little story that is told against this young peer. He is the son of a former Archbishop of Dublins, who was once found by a friend in great distress. "My son, Wille, has told a lie, he explained, almost in tears. "What will become of him?" "Why," said the friend, "he'll be a diplomatist." And, when Willie grew up, that was just the career he chose.

Lord Salisbury has not appeared much in public since he succeeded his famous father and ccased to be Lord Cranborne. Last night, at the King's College dinner, he looked as much like his cousin, the Premier, as ever, but his style of speaking has improved since the days when he used to "bark" at the House of Commons and scold the Front Opposition Bench. He is still as much devoted to Bishops as when he declared that lawn sleeves affected Sir William Harcourt as a red rag does a bull, and in the Lords he gets more of their company. So he is not really as unhappy as he looks.

"I often hear of the iniquities of girls of the present day," says Lady Broome, in an amusing article in the "Boudoir" for July, "but I don't come across those specimens, and I confess that I honestly believe the modern girl, as I know her, to be a very great improvement on the early Victoria maiden." Still there cannot have been many girls even in the middle of last century who were like the one Lady Broome knew, who "amazed her husband by appearing the first Sunday morning after their marriage, with her prayer book, which she handed to him with the utmost gravity and proceeded to rattle off the collect, episte, and gospel for the day, having no idea she was doing anything unusual!"

A MAN OF THE HOUR.

General Stackelberg.

Just as there are two Alexeieffs-the Admiral who rules as Viceroy, and the general, his cousin, in command at Harbin-so there are two Stackelbergs-one the Vice-Admiral who is Skrydloff's right-hand at Vladivostok, the other the general and baron defeated at Wa-fang-tien.

Stackelberg is three-quarters Teuton and one quarter Slav. The racial predominance of the German explains what the more dashing Russian officers condemn as his defect-excessive caution. Perhaps it was the desire to confound his critics which led the commander at Wa-fang-tien to make his disastrous stand.

Blue-eyed, bearded, with prominent ears, and a scantily-covered head, a student rather than a fighter, Stackelberg is more like a Lutheran pastor than a Russian general.

Foreign stamp collecting is his hobby, temperance his chief moral interest. He has made a fierce stand against the practice of colonels of regiments standing treat to their men on the birthdays of the Imperial family. When a captain he fell into not inglorious disgrace by thrashing a publican who was caught supplying spirits to men of his company who were already intoxicated. Stackelberg was intensely interested in our South African struggle, and once read a lesson to his officers upon the folly of underestimating an

QUESTION AND ANSWER.

What Is the Origin of the Names "Strawberry" and "Gooseberry"?

Strawberries were so called because they grew strewn, or strawed, about the ground. Many people suppose that the origin of their name lies in the fact that straw is often put down to protect the plants from touching the earth, but this is not Gooseberries were originally called "gorse-berries" because they grow on a prickly shrub. Gorse was a term that used to be applied to all such bushes.

The usual summer season of railway racing has now, begun. L hear that the South-Eastern and Chatham are about to run a train which, will do the journey between London and Margate in one wlay, It is a pity they have no competition to meet, or the time might be even more marvellously reduced.

BEAUTIFUL GOWNS FOR TO-DAY'S

To-day's great Noah's Ark Bazaar at the Albert Hall will prove once more, if proof be needed, how great a difference a becoming toilette makes for great a difference a becoming toilette makes for the success of any undertaking. Amongst the multitude of chantry affairs with which the season is crowded, this one should shine pre-eminent as a sattorial display.

Black Valenciennes lace is the material that will provide an uncommonly handsome dress for today's occasion, and there will be several of white broderie anglaise, which strictly speaking is a last season's fabric, defuly trimmed with Valenciennes in inlet medallions. These and all other thin materials, like batiste de soie, are posed this summer over white or coloured chiffon to make it look full and soft.

A Lovely Delft Blue.

A Lovely Delft Blue.

I noticed a charming frock in delft blue batiste de soie made for to-day with rings of black woven into it trimmed with insertions of Limerick embroidery, and there was another exquisite gown, a mass of Cluny lace and pale straw batiste embroidered all over, which showed beneath the lace embroidery a background of coffee-coloured batiste de soie. The taffetas now being used becomes softer and softer in appearance, and it is therefore necessary to differentiate between the various makes, calling the crisp, shining taffetas by its proper name taffetas glace, and the soft, clinging crepe-like variation infletas measurine; yet another member of the variation triffetas measurine; yet another member of the variation of the soft of the so

Ill-Effects of Latter Can Be Overcome.

III-Effects of Latter Can Be Overcome.

We are apt to grumble about our weather in Great Britain, but to one who has lived and suffered in the damp, hot, relaying climates of portions of the East it must seem almost ideal.

A lady, now living in Falmouth, writes of the great benefit she derived from the use of the scientific food Grape-Nuts in a hot climate.

In a more temperate climate like ours the rebuilding effects of this valuable food are more quickly felt, because a much less proportion is required to offset the ill-effects of climate.

The lady says:—"Some time ago, after several years passed abroad with my husband, who is in the Army, we were sent to a station celebrated for its damp, relaxing climate and its long trying summer. As the hot weather approached, I began to feel the relaxing and weakening effects of the deleterious climate, and by the time it was well begun I was in a fair way to become a physical wreck. Weakness and languor, a disinclination for any exertion or even thought assailed me. Never very strong, I became anzemic, palid, and listless, and above all suffered intensely from ine digestion, an old enemy of mine. In spite of all the vagaries of fashion, a black or a white hat varying in shape and material according to the occasion is always correct and artistic. Such hats can always be brightened by the addition of a handsome plume in one of the prevailing colours, and if the feather is of sufficient richness and length it is the only necessary trimming. Some such feathers, two yards long, are used as hat draperies, and very handsome and effective they are.

Tricorne turbans have a success all their own this season, and an effective dressy design is carried out in several shades of lavender, mauve, and violet chenille, with a trimming of velvet foltage.

Amongst other revivals of past modes comes the polonaise. Indeed, it is already pretty well revived, for one sees many a gown trimmed so that one cannot tell whether there is a tunic or not,

Or I might make the whole over a strip of elastic, to give it foundation and shape.

"In the middle of the back I should set a big rosette of chilfon velvet or taffetas, double and made like a cartwheel. I should make it as big round as a saucer.

"In the middle of this rosette I should place a handsome ornament of a round shape. A very pretty ornament may be made for a velvet rosette by taking a curtain ring of conventional size. This should be worked with golden brown or some other coloured silk until it is entirely covered, and then seven in the middle of the rosette.

"Or, if the gown would permit the scheme, that is, if it were long in the skirt, I might make a taffetas belt, and to the middle of the rosette with a silk scarf with deeply-fringed ends. This has something of the postilion effect without the stiffness of the postilion.

"There is a pretty belt that can be made daily. It requires three yards of satin ribbon three inches wide. The ribbon is statened in the middle of the front and then is carried round the waist again and again. The girdle can be made as high as one wishes. It is fastened with a fancy pin.

A turquoise satin ribbon, three yards long and three inches wide, could be utilised as a sash of this kind very effectively.

BOOM IN BAGPIPES.

Hard To Find Quiet Places for Practice

"I would that it were impossible, sir," was Dr. Johnson's rejoinder to Boswell's remark that the bagpipes was a difficult instrument to play.

The retort is no longer typical of English opinion upon this much-maligned instrument, as was proved by the reception given to the pipers of the 2nd Battalion Scots Guards, who are now playing for the L.C.C. in London parks.

Instructors in the accomplishment of piping are greatly in request just now, and number among their pupils many who can beast no Highland blood.

their pupils many who can boast no injuning blood.

An enthusiastic novice, who has never been north of the Tweed, yesterday informed a Mirror representative that the instrument is an easy and pleasant one to learn. Incidentally he corrected some erroneous impressions current upon the subject. "It is not a question of lungs at all," he declared indignantly; "the music is all produced with the fingers upon the 'chanter,' the longest of the attachment tubes. The other tubes are the drones, they make the humming noise.
"I should never play any other instrument myself, if it were not for the difficulty in finding a mice, quiet comer to practise. People seem to have the most insane prejudices."

Two-Thousand-Year-Old Pilgrimage to the Druids' Mecca

For nearly 2,000 years the custom of watching for the rising of the sun on the longest day has been observed at Stonehenge, and last night there was the usual pilgrimage to the historic circle of giant monoliths on Salisbury Plain.

It is only on a cloudless morning that it is po sible to see the first flash of light glance on the huge stone known as the Friar's Heel, which is huge stone known as the Friar's Heel, which is 200 yards from the circle, and from thence to the altar stone within the circle.

Last year was the first occasion for a very long time that such conditions prevailed. At daybreak not a cloud was to be seen, and at 3.44 the rim of the sun appeared over the distant bills in a line with the Friar's Heel, afterwards shining on the altar stone as it ascended.

The experience of 1903 was quite exceptional, for year after year visitors to the stone have been disappointed at the psychological moment, a small cloud obscuring the great red ball until it was well up in the heavens.

Of late years the excursion to Stonehenge to witness the dawn on the longest day has found much popularity, and it is quite usual, if the weather as fine, for a crowd whose numbers run into thousands to be gathered round the stone, having come by motor, bicycle, by horse, and on foot, from north, east, south, and west.

The siege of the chimney stack at the Newry salt works still continues, and the steeplejack defender is more than holding his own.

beige that he had not been provided with a fresh breakfast!

As he explained, provisions kept in a sooty chimney for two or three days at a time are apt to become stale. Above everything else, Jamie is human, and he looked forward longingly to the cuff he hoped to bestow upon the ears of his errant provider, in the shape of Jamie's lourteen-year-old son Tommy.

The lad makes an excellent scout, but it is chiefly in his capacity of general provision merichant that Jamie most admires his growing heir. Jamie is also a humorist, and he related with much satisfaction how in the early hours of Sunday morning he managed to pay a secret and fleeting visit to the bosom of his family. But his faithful scout got wind that the police were on the scent, and it took Jamie all his time to regain his "fortress." As it was he got back to his "fortrest" by a short head, and the chuckle that greeted the ears of the breathless constables below, showed them that they had once more failed to capture their quarry be present at the meeting, he had never expected to meet Mrs. Blandlord, and now he was left alone with her.

When he had accepted John Heron's invitation to he present at the meeting, he had never expected to meet Mrs. Blandlord, and now he was left alone with her.

"Of course, Miss Chevenix has forgotten us, and so has John Heron," he answered. "They have forgotten the whole world, they are wandering an the dream country, and have passed through the Ivory Gate." It is spoke in lazy, caressing tones, all the time staring hard at Amy, who was gazing with drooping eyes into the dull gas fire, turning to its warmth with a little shiver. She looked very pretty, for her large hat suited her, and he liked the way in which she had arranged the curls that waved charmingly over her low brow, and he also admired the heavy coil of hair dressed low on the nage of her neek.
"It must be nearly eleven o'dlock." She consulted a timy watch as she spoke, set in a chain bracelet and surrounded with a "glittering circle of brilliants, and she held out her wrist to his gaze. "See, it is nearly a quarter past."

"Won't you leave them in peace, and let me see you home? I have a hansom waiting for me outside." He spoke with some eagernose, watching the pretty, wavering face, admiring the delicate weakness and irresolution, for he hated women to be strong-minded and determined, she said, looking at limit helplessly; "Out I might get a hansom and go home by myself, perhaps. I don't want to hurry Miss Chevenia way, for Leevel she and Mr. Heron will go on talking for the next half-hour; I have foreseen this end all the time."

"In these benighted regions? Besides, there is Miss Chevenix; she will expect to find me here, for she was to drop me at Chelsen." Mrs. Blandford spoke with some hesitation.

"Leave a message with that sleepy old man, saying you have gone home. Miss Chevenix won't be sorry, under the circumstances; and Heron will see her to her destination, you may be sure of that. Come, now," he smiled in his lazy, caressing manner, and she yielded, but with some reluctance.

"Well, if you really don't mind. It is getting late," she walked over to the tired looking enstodian of the schools, and gave him a brief message for Beatrix, and then drew her stole high up over her shoulders and shook out her skirts; "Tm ready, quite," she said, turning to Julian Grimwood. They walked to the door together, each acutely conscious of the other's presence.

The crowd outside raised a faint cheer, but these two were not the couple they were waiting for. The Chewnix carriage was still in waiting, also the hansom Colonel Grimwood had retained. "Amy looked around, but could see no other vehicle, and she noticed that a faint, drizzling rain was falling and shat the sky threatened a wet night. He watched her anxiously for a little while, and then, without saying anything, slipped his arm round her waist. His touch seemed to weaken her resolution, and, with a low sighing breath, she allowed herself to lean back against his shoulder. This contact caused a sense of rapture to pervade her whole being, and she yielded dreamily to the joy of the moment.

Neither the man nor the woman uttered a word as the cab flashed along, for they were wrapped in a trowsy content. Grimwood rested his face against the brim of her soff hat and drank in the perfume of her hair; he felt lazily happy, and to both of them the future, stretched vague and indefinite; they had no desire to talk, it was better to dream.

definite; they had no desire to talk, it was better to dream.

The cab drew up sharply outside the flat at Chelsea, and they roused themselves from their languar of content. Amy Blandford left Grimwood to settle with the cabman, and walked in. Her flat was on the entrance floor, and she shallied a little as she hunted for her latch-key, wondering.

All at once the sound of footsteps passing through the little hall made her flush. She opened the door in a hurry; but, as she stepped in, Julian Grimwood followed her.

"Oh, it's too late; you must not come in," mur mured Amy Blandford, but she flicked up the electric light as she spoke, and made no further protest as Colonel Grimwood closed the door behind him

He glanced round the little hall, admiring the prettiness of its green and white decorations, the huge stand of flowering plants, the soft-toned car-peting. Mrs. Blandford gazed at him a little ner-vously, and led the way into the dining-room.

"Won't you help yourself to a whisky and soda?" asked Mrs. Blandford, after a second's pause, "and have a sandwich." She pointed, as he spoke, to a daintily-arranged little supper tray and began to eat some grapes, breaking a biseuit in half, and pouring herself out a glass of water, which she sipped daintily, keeping her eyes fixed on Julian Grimwood.

He helped himself to some whisky, and swallowed it hastily, then he turned to her with outstretched hand. "You are quite right, Amy; it is late, and I must go, but you will see me when I come to-morrow. I will be all right to-morrow, 'Amy, won't it?"

She caught her breath a little and sat down in one of the big, oak elbow chairs, her face looking very pale against the dark wood.

"Why do you want so much to come? It would be wiser to stay away."

"Why do you want to move ..."

"Would it? I doubt it?" He crossed the room and stood directly in front of her chair, gazing down at her. "I lost you, Amy, years ago," he said quietly, "and I have always been conscious of the foolish part I played. Some men have a prejudice against marriage, and I confess that I had then; but I love you madily now—now you will be my wife?" He asked the question a little consciously, bending forward to look at her troubled face.

"You know nothing whatever about me," she answered in low tones, playing with her rings and twisting them up and down her fingers; "you are rather rash, Colonel Grimwood; suppose I took you at your word?"

"Amy," he knelt down by her side, and put his cames round her, the sleeve of his coat brushing against her wrist and thrilling her, for she lowed the strong arms and he fience way he had I don't care a rap who or what you are—I love you, and that's enough?

She leaned forward and laid her arms lightly round his neck, abandoning herself to the joy of the moment; then, all at once, her mood changed, and she tore herself from the man's embrace.

"Please leave me," she cried hoarsely, "I should have told you before that I never intend to marry; I have no wish to marry; I prefer my freedom." She laughed half hysterically, and wiped her eyes with a dainty laced-edged handker-chief, laughing and sobbing in the same breath. Julian Grimwood rose slowly to his feet; ino Englishman likes to be made a fool of, and he was uncertain of Amy Blandford's real mood. Heremotion seemed a little theatrical and overdone. "Good-night," he said quietly. "I suppose I must accept your decision—for a time." "For always," she replied, in trembling tones, "my mind is made up; I shall never marry." He bent his head, thinking that compliance with her mood would be the wiesest course to pursue, then he said, in a low, deep voice:

"You will let me be your friend; you will not deny me the privilege of your friendship?" Cond, no, "she replied, cagerly, "let us ahways be friends, come and see me whenever you like, for 1 shall always be glad to see you; and now, good-bye, my friend." She looked at him with moist, appealing eyes, holding out her hands, and he could see that she was feverishly anxious for him to take his departure, and he could also perceive how much she cared for him.

"I shall call to-morrow," he answered; "say that you will be at home."

Whilst Julian Grimwood bowled westward in his cab, Mrs. Blandford remained standing where he had left her in the dining-room, her lips still ting-ling from his kiss.
She looked absolutely lifted out of herself, a woman transported by emotion, and her eyes glitered feverishly, and her breast heaved under the loose lace blouse. All at once she shivered, then a triamphant smile crossed her lips, and she swayed forwards and looked at a portrait of herself that hung on the wall—a clear, smiling, wistful, childish little face.

"It has come true," she cried, addressing the picture, "all I longed for when you were painted. You white, smilling creature, I have found what I wanted—love." #### LETTER TO THE KING

LETTER TO THE KING.

In reading an old Greek newspaper, the Roumanian discovered that King Edward's face resembled the map c' Australia, so he promptly drew a map of that enterprising country and sent it to his Majesty with a letter depicting the benefit to science of drawing faces from maps.

In due course Hechter received a reply from Buckingham Palace regretting that his Majesty had no use for the returned profile map.

Mauritius Hechter is a well-educated lad, and his father is a prominent brush manufacturer at Bucharest. The lad's love of adventure has been imbibed from books of travel by various authors.

During the last ten years numerous adventures have attempted to walk round the world at the expense of a confiding public. Most of them came from America, and have pushed wheelbarrows, or are said to have done other deeds to inspire sympathy.

At Cairo in 1896 an American, who was walking round the world in a brown-paper suit, alighted at the terrace of Shepheard's Hotel and immediately started selling his photos for she scale.

When persons did not desire his picture he borrowed the dollar just the same. One of the simple things he asked for was a passage to Bombay on a P. and O. liner.

THE SKIPPER SAID "NO."

THE SKIPPER SAID "NO."

The cold refusal of the captain pained the American pedestrian beyond measure. Finally the had to choose between joining the chorus of an Italian comic opera company and the circulation staff of an Egyptián newspaper.

Dodging both these fearful ordeals, his gifts were afterwards highly appreciated as a guide to the tombs of the ancient kings and other more or less notorious early people.

In order to fulfil the terms of the compelltion Hechter has to continue his walk from New York to St. Louis, and the Aftiror will provide him with his teket to convey him from this country across the Atlantic.

Application is also being made to the American Embassy in London to facilitate the boy's Landing in America, as under the present immigration Lws he is liable to be turned back if he is without means.

STRANDED DANCER'S PLIGHT.

Charged with assault and an offence under the Vagrancy Act, William McPherson, twenty-six, a man of colour, described as a music-hall artist, was sentenced at Westminster to five months' hard

Grace Wood, a dancer, who was called as to Grace Wood, a dancer, who was called as to the assault, said she had known the prisoner for over two years. She made his acquaintance when with a travelling company at Croydon. Soon after that they were stranded at Lifton, and prisoner offered to look after her until sike got employment. For a time she lived with him as his wife, but with a volley of stones, and had to take refuge in the office of the German Steamship Company.

At Sofia some Bulgarian officers made a collection for him, and Hechter went on his way rejoicing. Unfortunately, a soldier and a wandering maestro on the violin saw the money handed over, and they laid wait for the youth from Roumania.

As he was passing through a lonely forest that night Hechter addenly received a fearful blow on the side of the head and fell to the ground. He

How the £2 Emigrants Feasted and Flirted When the Sea Was Calm.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

New York, June 9 emigrants on board the Potsdam rushed to the ship's rails to get a first glimpse of the new country

We had all been longing for a glimpse of the homely land after ten days of pitching and tossing and the terrors of seasickness. Men, women, and children, from eighteen different European nationalities leaned over the bulwarks and gazed with longing eyes at the faint blur on the horizon, which we were told was America. Voluble tongues broke out in Russian, Polish, Italian, Roumanian, German, and Scandinavian, all telling of the hopes man, and Scandinavian, all telling of the hopes and longings which this wonderful land of the dollar should fulfil.

So we hung over the rails until the afternoon faded into night, and the faint coastline grew clearer and clearer. So the voyage was finished with its pleasures and pains.

These pleasures and pains.

These pleasures and pains were very real, too. At the very commencement, in the hotel at Rotterdam, there was an incident which wrung our hearts and evoked a scanty collection from our not too well lined pockets. Among the motley throng crowded in the dining-hall of the Emigrants' Hotel on Willemplaats was a sturdy Russian in high boots, sheepskin breeches, and gaudy tasselled waistoat. As his turn came to be examined by conventionalities, lying huddled up, one over the other, the women, as a rule, with hair streaming. At this time the chief pleasure seemed to be derived-from eating the raw herrings, of which every emigrant had a supply on coming aboard, the sucking of the head being the final satisfaction. The meals were partaken of in the upper holds, which had been converted into dinig-rooms by means of long trestle tables and benches. The rate at which enigrants can be fed per day amounts, roughly, to a fraction over one shillings. In addition it is possible to buy extra luxuries in the shape of milk and eggs at the following rates:

a pint, 2id., lemonade, a pint, 2d.

After the third day the meal tables had scanty attendances until the rough weather was over. The children, by some strange chance, suffered scarcely at all. It was among grown up men and women that the seourge was worst. They lay in their bunks until turned out, huddled in masses together about the floors or on deck. Stewards worked vigorously among them, endeavouring to promote some decency and cleanliness, but with ill success.
Sufferers preferred to remain inert, not even moving or avoiding their neighbours when sick-the doctor the man betrayed signs of uneasiness. He looked furrively behind him, as though seeking a means of escape, and attempted to wriggle lower down the line. A stern word from the bury-porter on guard, and the doctor was before him. There was no need to go further than the expectable that the man was smitten with a decrease which would forbid of his entering the United States. The doctor passed on, and the man was taken to another room set apart for the rejected.

RUSSIAN DESERTER'S PREDICAMENT.

RUSSIAN DESERTER'S PREDICAMENT.

When we came to hear it his story was a pitiful one. He had been in the Russian army and was a deserter. He had been brutally treated and the pay was insufficient to support his wife and two children. He managed to pass the frontier with his fittle hoard of money, and he took passage for the States to make money and send for his wife: He was between the devil and the deep sea. He could not go back to Russia, and he could not go to the States. His passagemoney was all he had. The hat went round, and among us the money was raised, sufficient for hun to return to London.

The bustle of going aboard, with each man carrying his family belongings in an unwieldy sack or bulky basket, lasted an hour. Then a rush was made to the sterage quarters. Each found his or her allotted bunk either forward or aft, and took possession, the married men with women and children aft, and the single, forward. Costume and dress were picturesque and varied annong the women folk, some wearing high boots and short skirts, others the brilliant-hued petiticoats common to the poorer Continental classes, and nearly all neadlerss.

To the strains of an American cake-walk, played

To the strains of an American cake-walk, played on the first-class deck, the Potsdam cast off.

EUROPE'S FAILURES.

There is little to record concerning the beginning of any long sea voyage. The weather was fine and the sea calm for a couple of days. Seasickness was not thought of until the process of becoming at home was complete. Men, women, and children lay about the decks, discarding superfluous clothing in the shape of coats, and sometimes outer skirts and stockings. The true life of these poverty-stricken outcasts of Eastern Europe began to appear. They paid little or no attention to, the ness overcame them. The result, at times, became revolting in the extreme. Many of the women grew almost panie-stricken with terror.

At nights the moaning and cries echoed pitiably through the quiet passages. One Polish woman feebly besonght a patient stewardess to be allowed to die. "Let me die; let me die," she cried, as the boat rolled and pitched in the heavy sea.

KENDRICK'S CHALLENGE.

KENDRIOK'S CHALLENGE.

There were some notes of pleasure after the sickness had wom itself away. A honeymoon couple, oblivious to everything and everybody, the man a Montana cow-puncher, and the woman a stout, comely Swede, made violent love at every opportunity. A sturdy German, who had been refused admittance into the States four times before on account of disease, was making a fifth attempt, and sang cheery drinking songs to the edification of all. Bob Kendrick, the Polish Whitechapel ighting man, challenged all and sundry. Rough sports were organised, one man standing with his back to the others, who buffeted him vigorously, the object being to guess the buffeter. At night races were held along the second cabin deck when the vigilance of the sailors on duty could be eluded, or visits paid to friends at the other end of the ship. So the time passed until the promised land hove in sight.

ROMANCE—AND OFFICIALDOM.

ROMANCE-AND OFFICIALDOM.

BOMANCE—AND OFFICIALDOM.

New York was finally reached in the early morning. There was a tedious wait until first and second cabin passengers had been disposed of, and transportation to Ellis Island, the emigration quarters, commenced. There, in cage-like apartments in a huge hall, emigrants were placed. Alert American doctors came, and there was more uplifting of the vertical control of the extension of vaccination marks. Some entry were turned back, each being chalkmarked to the deportation department.

A uthetic scene occurred here. A young Roumanan had fallen in love with a Russian girl durate the voyage. They intended to be married dimendiately and go west. She was passed by the doctors and he refused. The girl clung to the man's hand through the bars and cried bitterly. But the officials were inexorable, and the man was full glances at his sweetheart. By twelve o'clock the inspection was over, and some seven hundred emigrants were added to the population of the United States.

RACING AT GATWICK AND NEWCASTLE.

No Betting on the Northumberland Plate-The Chief Competitors-Andover for the North Derby.

SPECIAL SELECTIONS BY "GREY FRIARS."

There will be plenty of racing this week—North, away celt (6st 11lb), Pharisee (8st 7lb), and Love Charm South, and in the Midlands. The Gatwick meetling starts to-day with an interesting programme, and the first stage of the Newcastle programme begins at Gosforth Park—one of the most beautiful racing rendezvous in the country.

Times have changed. There is no betting up to the present in London on the Northumberland Plate, the "Pitmen's Derby," which will be decided to-morrow. That one-time great speculadecided to-morrow. That one-time great speculative handicap will scarcely bring out ten runners.
The fancied division are Palmy Days, Pradella, and Cock of the Roost. It is probable the Ascot winner, Merry Andrew, will chance his luck, but his penalty should turn the tables in favour of Pradella. As Robinson's horses are reported coughing, Sandboy is viewed with some suspicion apart from his actual merits. Roseburn will represent l'Anson's stable, and Servitor will assist Cock of the Roost for the Newmarket division.
Mr. F. Alexander has struck Throwavay out of the Plate, but the blue and white jacket will be carried in the North Derby by Andover, and judging by the style in which that good colt scored at Ascot he should be able to concede the weight to Lock Ryan, whom I reckon to be best of Andover's opponents. I'Anson's stable holds a strong hand in the Gosforth Park Blenniah.
Bray be wiser to depend on Admiral Lambton's Pelopidas, a youngster that has been very well tried.

The draw for the semi-funal round of the competition for the M.C.C. tennis prizes is as follows:—V. Pennell v. M. Yorke; H. E. Crawley v. H. S. Mahony. The former pair will meet at Lord's on Saturday, June 25.

In a match played at Hopton, between the Cambridge Telegraph Messengers and Hopley, the last-Cambridge lads batted only one cricketer obtained double fagures, A. Beard, who had captured six wickets, being responsible for 57 out of 79.

LONDONERS MISSED CATCHES.

Delightful weather favoured the opening of the match between Essex and Yorkshire at Leyton, the sun shining all day long, and a pleasant breeze preventing the heat from becoming oppressive Essex had to take the field without Carpenter, who had twisted his knee, and Inns was left out, the home side being completed by the inclusion of Tosetti and T. Russell. Yorkshire made one change from the team which drew with Worcestershire, Whitehead being left out in favour of Walker Wainwright, who had not previously appeared for Yorkshire this season.

Winning the toss, Essex at first fared so well that in little more than an hour they had eighty runs on the board, and only one man out. Rhodes and Hirst then brought about such a change that at lunch time there were six wickets down for 120, five wickets having fallen in three-quarters of an hour for the addition of 40 runs. The later batsmen, however, played up pluckily, and 87 runs were added afterwards, the innings closing shortly after four o'clock for 207.

Fane Bats Soundly

Fane, who went in first and was second out at 81, played sound cricket for over an hour, making several nice late cuts. Perrin, after an indifferent start, settled down in fair form, but scarcely utilised his chances to the best advantage. Quite as good an innings as any on the side was that of Gillingham, who, in fifty minutes, hit up 37 out of 57, scoring in capital style on the off side. Rhodes and Hirst bowled very well indeed, the former getting both Fane and McGahey caught at slip off good-length balls which just did a little, and in all taking five wickets for 68.

Vorkshire, in the course of rather more than two hours' batting, hit up 153 for the loss of two batsmen, and thus left off with a good deal the better of the game, being only 54 behind with eight wickets in hand.

of the game, being only 54 behind with eight wickets in hand.

For the satisfactory position in which Yorkshire found themselves at the drawing of stumps, however, they were considerably indebted to their opponents, for both Wilkinson and Denton were badly missed, the former when 10 and the latter when only four, with the result that the second wicket, which should have gone down, like the first, at 34, did not fall until 80.

Denton, after his lucky escape, played bright and skillul cricket, cutting and driving in most finished style, and, in company with Wainwright, hit up 73 runs in the last fitty minutes.

Wainwright started indifferently, but made a number of fine cuts.

Ringrose, while bowling, strained himself so badly that he had to leave the field and be surgically attended to. He will not, of course, attempt to bowl any more in the match, and is not likely to but unless Yorkshire find themselves pressed. Present score and analysis:
